MEN SCOUR COUNTRY FOR ESCAPED CONVICT

Prison Officials Relentless in Their Search for Italian.

COST IS NO FACTOR

To Maintain Discipline and Set Example to Convicts at New Penitentiary the Chase for Few Who Escape is Never Abandoned.

Ario DeSantis, an Italian, escaped from the new penitentiary about 2.30 o'clock last Friday morning. Up to this time he has not been captured, although the prison officials believe they know about where he is and that they will have him in custody before long.

DeSantis took advantage of the fact that he was in the charge of a new guard. He obtained permission to go to a toilet and quickly disappeared in the darkness of the night. His escape was discovered shortly afterward and the prison whistle was sounded. It is supposed that the man had outside assistance, probably from several friends who had been discharged from the penitentiary in recent months. He managed to elude the numerous guards who scoured the surrounding territory and traveled considerable distance before any clue was had as to his whereabouts. It is supposed that he made his way to the Philipsburg section.

Like most of the men who have escaped from the new prison, DeSantis had but a short time to serve until his term would have expired. In the event of his being captured he will be sent back to Pittsburgh for a term of five years. He is 29 years old, 5 feet, 2 5.8 inches in height and weighs about 130 pounds. He has dark brown hair and has a blue coal scar about one inch in length at the outer corner of his right eye. The first finger of his left hand has been amputated at the second joint, and the left thumb is deformed. The nail on the second finger of the left hand also is deformed. At the time of his escape he wore a white and blue striped shirt, blueish trousers of coarse material and brogan shoes.

Should DeSantis succeed in eluding the men who are trailing him he will no doubt, head for his native country. If he is not recaptured he will be the second, only, of the prisoners who have escaped from the new penitentiary who have had their trouble for nothing. Up until the escape of DeSantis the only prisoner to get away and avoid capture was an Italian who managed to slip through the net set for him and who finally made his way back to Italy. The penitentiary officials traced him to Italy, but there their chase came to an abrupt ending. A native of Italy cannot be extradited from that country. This fact alone prevents the man in question being returned to the penitentiary here. The search for escaped prisoners is a relentless one, for the prison officials appreciate that there must be no laxity along this line. Their theory is that while kindness is the motto inside the prison, infraction of the rules, particularly attempting to escape, must be met with severe treatment for the offender. The escaped convict who is captured and returned to Pittsburgh must wear a conspicuously striped suit as a badge of shame.

While the new prison is being constructed the officials anticipate that there will be a limited number of escapes, but they are confident that all, or virtually all, will be recaptured. It is said that a prisoner who escaped from the new prison crossed and recrossed the ocean while wandering as a fugitive, only to eventually land in the arms of an officer and be returned to Pittsburgh for a sentence double that of the original term. It is believed that the escaped prisoner who managed to make his way to Italy is being watched and that he dare not leave that country lest he be picked up by officers detailed especially to watch him. For the lesson it serves the other convicts, the never-ending search for an escaped prisoner by the penitentiary officials may be said to be as relentless as the tracking down of criminals by the United States secret service agents. The latter often turn up with a prisoner for whom they searched for several years. So it is with the penitentiary officials. Their policy is to keep on the trail of every man who escapes from the new prison until he is landed.

ANOTHER LINER SUNK

Destruction of Hesperian Complicates Situation With Germany.

The Hesperian, a liner of the Allan Steamship Co., was submarined by the Germans off Queenstown last Saturday and the big liner went to the bottom with 13 or more passengers and members of the crew. The greater number of passengers were able to escape in lifeboats. According to Captain Main, of the ill-fated ship, the Hesperian was torpedoed without warning.

The attack on the Hesperian has complicated the already badly strained relations between the United States and Germany and considerable anxiety prevails in official circles at Washington. The destruction of the Hesperian followed so closely on the heels of the assurance from Germany that in the future no ships would be torpedoed without warning that diplomatic circles are venturing no predictions as to what may develop in the next ten days. Reports are conflicting regarding Americans having been on board the Hesperian when she was torpedoed. The most authentic information obtainable is that one member of the crew was an American. The ship remained afloat for some time after being submarined, but went down while being towed to Queenstown.

Prior to the attack on the Hesperian the belief prevailed at Washington that the crisis between the United States and Germany had been passed and that in the future the Germans would torpedo no vessels without warning and giving passengers and crews ample opportunity to escape. In official circles there is some belief in the theory advanced by naval experts that the Hesperian may have been destroyed by striking a floating mine. The basis for this theory is the fact that the vessel was struck forward when well outside the zone in which the German submarines usually operate.

MAIL CARRIER KILLED

Tyrone Man's Automobile Backed Over Fifty Foot Embankment.

Harry C. Albright, Sr., Tyrone's oldest mail carrier, was instantly killed late Monday night when his automobile backed over a fifty-foot embankment on the back road to Tipton, near the old Wolfang farm. Mr. Albright was in the act of turning his car and backed over the edge of the high embankment. The next instant the machine went crashing to the bottom. When picked up Mr. Albright was dead.

Some time ago Mr. Albright purchased a 5-passenger car and during leisure hours drove it as a jitney in hauling persons to nearby parks. It was on such a trip that Monday night's sad accident occurred. He had taken a party to Tipton and was returning when he met his death. Fortunately there were no passengers in the car at the time.

CHANGE IN ITINERARY

Gov. Brumbaugh to Visit Here October 7th but Not to Remain Over Night.

A change has been made in the itinerary of Governor Brumbaugh's proposed automobile tour through this section of the State next month. The Governor originally planned spending the night of October 7th in Bellefonte. He finds that this will not be possible and will spend only a part of the evening of that day here, going to Williamsport for the night.

Just what hour the Governor and his party will arrive here will not be known until later. It is likely the party will be here several hours, at least, probably for supper.

JUDGE ORVIS BRANDS QUESTIONS "INSULTING"

Says Potter and Shuey Did Not Desire to Know Facts.

"NO LIQUOR FUNDS"

In Letter to Two Members of Temperance Committee Judge Denies Receiving Money in Campaign From Liquor Interests.

Bellefonte, Pa., Sept. 7, 1915.

To Messrs. James H. Potter and C. C. Shuey, Bellefonte, Pa.

Gentlemen:—A statement purporting to be signed by yourselves appeared in last week's issue of THE REPUBLICAN. Though it was neither addressed to myself nor any one in particular, it purports to ask a series of questions which imply, at least, reflection upon myself. I do do not believe you desire to know the real facts, because if you did you would have taken the trouble to have inquired of me personally, or at least examined the records at the Court House. But in order to satisfy the honest voters of the County who have a right to be informed, I wish to address to you in the most public manner possible, that every implication and injurious inference that can possibly be made from your insulting questions are entirely false.

To be more specific I here state, that I have never received a penny of income or revenue from any liquor business or any business allied with the manufacture or sale of any intoxicating beverage, not even a patent medicine having for one of its principal ingredients wine and alcohol. I have not received for my campaign expenses any money from any licensed or unlicensed person in the County, nor have I the promise from any. In fact, no one has subscribed to my campaign, and I am paying my campaign expenses out of my private resources. The records will show that I have refused many applications for license because of remonstrances and, as a fact, I have never ignored any remonstrances where there has been any pertinent facts alleged and proven.

As I propose to publish this in the several newspapers of the County, I will regard further statements or questions of this kind hereafter as malicious falsehoods. I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
ELLIS L. ORVIS.

Charged With Misuse of Mails.

C. C. Stringfellow, residing near Flemington, was arrested on Tuesday charged with sending threatening letters through the United States mails. The Lock Haven "Despatch" on Tuesday published the following version of the incident:

C. C. Stringfellow, of near Flemington who was arrested on March 4th of this year on a warrant charging him with sending threatening letters to John S. Eckert through the mails, and to Orrin Peters, superintendent of the American Brick Works, near Flemington, and who was subsequently discharged because important and necessary testimony was not forthcoming, was re-arrested this forenoon by Harvey F. Smith, of Scranton, a Deputy U. S. Marshal, and Constable W. W. Pettingill, on the same charge.

After the failure of the County officials to have the accused held after the first arrest, George W. Daley, of Williamsport, a U. S. Postal Inspector and Constable W. W. Pettingill went to work on the case and after securing evidence quietly at different times, the arrest was made today.

The accused was taken to Williamsport on the 11:20 train, and was given a hearing before U. S. Commissioner W. D. Crocker at 2 o'clock this afternoon. A number of witnesses, including John S. Eckert Orrin F. Peters, W. R. Shaffer post-master at Flemington, and Constable Pettingill left on the same train to testify at the hearing.

The U. S. postal authorities were never satisfied with the outcome of the first hearing, and decided to go to work on the case. They feel confident they now have sufficient evidence to convict.

Schools Are Crowded.

The Bellefonte public schools opened for the year on Monday September 6th. The attendance exceeds that of last year by about 60. The number of pupils enrolled is about 800, as compared with 743 last year. Even with the additional room provided by the School Board the schools are more crowded than one year ago. Professor J. D. Wagner, principal of schools, anticipates a very successful school year.

TEMPERANCE LEAGUE IS ORGANIZED IN COUNTY

Has No Choice Between Dale and Johnston for Judge.

OFFICERS ARE CHOSEN

Large Attendance of Representatives from All Sections of County at Meeting Here on Tuesday to Promote Temperance.

At an interesting and well attended meeting held in Bellefonte on Tuesday the Centre County Temperance League was formally launched. The aim of the new organization is to promote temperance and encourage voters to support a "dry" candidate for Judge at the primaries on September 21st. No action toward indorsing Clement Dale or J. Kennedy Johnston for Judge was taken at the meeting. It was announced that the new organization is neutral as between Dale and Johnston, but that these two candidates alone of the five in the field are recognized as "dry" candidates and therefore entitled to the support of the temperance forces throughout the county.

The attendance from all sections of the county at Tuesday's meeting was particularly gratifying to the leaders of the movement to awaken interest among the voters at the present time. The fact that there were more men than women at the meeting was regarded as an indication that the movement is meeting with favor generally. Professor Marshman, of State College, called the assemblage to order and also served as temporary chairman. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Brown, of Millheim. F. H. Thomas, of Bellefonte; J. I. Thompson, of Lemont, and Professor Foster, of State College, comprised a committee which drafted a constitution that was adopted by the meeting. Mr. Brant, of Altoona, representing the State Anti-Saloon League, was present and offered some valuable suggestions to the committee.

Mr. Dale and Mr. Johnston, candidates for Judge, addressed the meeting, each speaking briefly. Both were accorded a respectful hearing. Rev. Dr. E. H. Yocum and Rev. James P. Hughes were among the other speakers.

These officers were chosen for the coming year: Professor Marshman, of State College, president; Professor Foster, of State College, with Titus M. Gramley, of Spring Mills, and J. H. Potter, of Bellefonte, vice presidents; George L. Goodhart, of Centre Hall, treasurer, and A. L. Wright, of State College, secretary.

"The Open Window."

An original theme with three acts of powerful, intense drama is "The Open Window", which will be presented at Garman's Opera House next Wednesday Sept. 15th. Playgoers are conversant with the success of "Within The Law," "Alias Jimmy Valentine, "Under Cover" and others of that description. It is not exaggerated to say "The Open Window" is stronger than any of them. It is full of gripping situations and few better plays have been written in years. The plot hinges on a female Raffles; it is a plea for the Settlement Worker in calling attention to the good this organization is doing in the larger cities among the poor and unfortunates of the Underworld. There has been no stronger sermon written for righteousness than this play. It deals with crime but there are no criminals after the first act. Prices 25, 35, 50 and 75c and a few at $1.00.

He is also survived by the following brothers and sisters: Lucian, of Lewistown; James of Milesburg; Samuel, of Bellefonte and Mrs. Anna Brown, of Bellefonte.

Points on Dog Law.

The following is in reference to the enforcement of the alien dog law and instructions to game protectors:

I herewith enclose to you a copy of the attorney general's opinion relative to the right of aliens to own or be possessed of dogs in this commonwealth so that you may be in position to inform justices and others who may be interested, and who have been led astray by recent newspaper reports regarding this matter.

You will notice that under the opinion of the attorney general the alien has no right to own or be possessed of a dog, no matter whether the dog be a pup, a household pet, a hunting dog, or any other kind of a dog. For your information I desire to say, this law was not drafted or presented to the legislature by the game commission or by sportsmen, but instead was conceived and made as it is, through the effort of sheep-raisers and cattlemen, still the law imposes certain duties upon the officers of the game commission and we must perform these duties to the best of our ability under our oaths. We expect to do this in a reasonable manner, considering the purpose of the act as indicated by its title. "To give additional protection to wild birds and animals and game," etc. This act was not passed for the purpose of hardships upon aliens, either through the killing of their dogs or by taking their hard-earned dollars through penalties, and you are to use good judgment in its enforcement in so far as you as an officer of the game commission are concerned. You are to consider the place where the dog may be found, as well as the likelihood of the dog to injure or destroy game or wild birds. A poodle dog, for instance, even in the woods is not apt to injure game to any great extent, neither is a bulidog or any other dog kept confined by its master in a city likely to do much harm to birds or game. We direct that you as a game protector refrain from taking any action whatever in cases where the dog, no difference what its character may be, is not in position to injure game or wild birds. If the dog spared for this reason is afterward found in position where game or wild birds may be destroyed, that is another proposition. The dog of the small town or the country that is permitted to run at will, in many instances half starved, is the dog you must look after, and you are to do this in a reasonable way, using good judgment in every instance.

You are to destroy dogs only after the expiration of three weeks after the time your notices to aliens, printed in English, Slavonic and Italian, regarding their keeping dogs were posted.

If you find aliens even after the expiration of this time who for any reasons may have retained their dogs, but who are willing, without trouble, to obey the mandates of the act, either disposing of the dogs themselves or permitting you to destroy them, you are to do this without the imposition of a penalty or of costs. Where the alien refuses to either dispose of the dog himself or to permit you to destroy such dog without trouble, you are to push the matter to the limit, taking such steps as may be necessary to secure the desired end.

You are to remember that this law prevails in Pennsylvania until it has been, for some reason, declared a nullity by action of the supreme court.

You are not expected to destoy dogs belonging to either aliens or others simply because they may be killing sheep or poultry, or running through farmers' grain. The destruction of such dogs is a matter entirely for the farmers upon whose lands the dogs may be found. You will no doubt receive numerous calls to destroy dogs and for various reasons, but you are to remember that you are paid from a fund raised by sportsmen. You are employed to protect game and wild birds; you represent no other interests in this commonwealth, and are expected to kill dogs only as a protection to game and wild birds.

Use good judgment in this matter and write the office in all matters in which you are not absolutely sure of your position.

Respectfully yours,
Joseph Kalbfus,
Secretary Game Commission.

New Law Protects Public.

The State-wide enforcement of the Act to protect the patrons of hotels, restaurants, and eating houses, which was passed by the last Legislature, has been begun by Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, State Commissioner of Health at Harrisburg. All of the local Boards of Health in the boroughs and cities have received a communication from Dr. Dixon enclosing copies of this Act and calling upon them to instruct their health officers to make a regular inspection at intervals of at least once a month to secure the strict observance of the provisions.

The Law prohibits the employment of any individual in the capacity of cook, waiter, chambermaid, kitchen help or other house servant suffering from trachoma, active tuberculosis of the lungs, open skin tuberculosis, syphilis, gonorrhea, open external cancer, or barber's itch. It requires that the proprietors of all hotels, restaurants, dining cars, or public eating places, shall institute and maintain a medical inspection of employes of this class at intervals of at least twice a year, for the purpose of excluding from their employment persons found to be suffering from any of these diseases. The law provides that between the times of these regular inspections, if notice is served on the owner or manager of any such place by physicians or by the health authorities that an employe is suffering from any of these diseases, they shall be promptly excluded from employment in the capacities mentioned.

The law also requires the proper cleansing of all dishes and eating and drinking utensils. It prohibits the use of public towels and common drinking vessels.

Under the provisions of the law, the person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of the Act, upon conviction in a summary proceeding before any Justice of the Peace or Alderman, if found guilty, is subject to a fine of not less than five dollars or more than one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than thirty days or both, at the discretion of the Court.

When interviewed regarding this subject, Dr. Dixon srid: "This admirable Act of Assembly gives the local health authorities and the traveling public an efficient means of protecting themselves against serious infections, which in the past have unfortunately been too common. While railroads and the better class of hotels have instituted an inspection service for the protection of the public, there has on the whole been a general disregard of the possibilities of wide-spread infection from the disease mentioned in this Act owing to the carelessness of employes and employers. The traveler and restaurant patron, who of necessity support the eating places and hotels, have a right to be protected.

"The penalty clause attached to this Act makes it readily enforceable by the local authorities and we feel confident that it will result in a wide-spread improvement of conditions in hotels and restaurants."

BELLEFONTE WANTS TO KNOW

The Answer Is Found in the Statement of a Bellefonte Resident.

From week to week, from year to year, there have been appearing in these columns statements made by neighbors, which we have all read with great interest and many of us with great profit. But what we want to know is, do they stand the greatest test of all—the test of time? Here is conclusive evidence on this point from a Bellefonte woman.

Mrs. J. C. Johnson, 365 E. Bishop St., Bellefonte, says: "I suffered from backache and pains across my loins and I could hardly get about the house. Dizzy spells came over me and I nearly fell. I was restless at night and my kidneys caused me a lot of annoyance. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, which I got at Green's Pharmacy Co., did me more good than anything else. The backache and pains disappeared and my kidneys became normal. I now feel better in every way, as Doan's Kidney Pills certainly cured me." (Statement given October 21st, 1907).

OVER SIX YEARS LATER, Mrs. Johnson said: "The cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me some time ago has been permanent."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Johnson had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Testing an Explosive.

One of the most dangerous of explosives is iodide of nitrogen, a black powder which the slightest touch will often cause to explode when dry with great violence. In experiments to determine the cause of its extreme explosiveness some damp iodide of nitrogen was rubbed on the strings of a bass viol. It is known that the strings of such an instrument will vibrate when those of a similar instrument having an equal tension are played upon. In this case, after the explosive had become thoroughly dry upon the strings, another bass viol was brought near and the strings sounded. At a certain note the iodide of nitrogen on the prepared instrument exploded. It was found that the explosion occurred only when a rate of vibration of sixty a second was communicated to the prepared strings. Vibration of the G string caused an explosion, while that of the E string had no effect.

The Siamese Topknot.

A Siamese child, whether boy or girl, wears its hair in a little topknot until it has attained the age of eleven or twelve years. On reaching this age the topknot cutting ceremony takes place. The child is dressed in its best, and amid much rejoicing of relatives and friends the topknot is cut, one lock at a time. The head is then completely shaved by the priests. All guests invited to the ceremony bring presents, usually money, which is carefully invested for the child by its parents or guardians. A young prince or princess will sometimes receive as much as $25,000 in presents at his or her topknot cutting ceremony, while a poor child may get $10 or $15.—Wide World Magazine.

The Red Squirrel.

When the red squirrel begins tapping maple trees for the sap the animal makes an incision in the bark and waits until the sap has trickled a short distance down the trunk of the tree. He then begins at the bottom of the stream and licks up until he has reached the source of the flow, when he again waits and repeats the performance until satisfied.

DIVORCE IN SCANDINAVIA.

It Is Very Easy to Obtain, and It Does Not Cost Anything.

In Scandinavia divorce by mutual consent is the recognized way. And husband and wife may reach this agreement when neither has violated any marital obligation. The law, you see, does not require them to wait until one has wronged the other. But when they have reached the point where they two know that their real union is ended they may secure a divorce for the asking. It doesn't cost anything. There is not even a lawyer needed. The process is simple. You notify a magistrate that you are separating. You are not required to go into details. You don't have to spread your marital troubles on court records and newspaper pages.

One reason is as sufficient here as when you entered into matrimony. You simply state that you no longer wish to continue the marriage. Then one party to the contract goes away for a year—in Finland it is for only three months. At the end of the period the magistrate hands you the papers that dissolve the marriage as quietly as it was made.

If, as rarely happens, mutual consent through the refusal of one of the contracting parties cannot be secured the process is a little longer, the probationary period of one year being extended to two. But there is always a way out. Sweden has no less than twelve grounds for divorce. It is accomplished in as dignified a way as any other partnership might be dissolved.—Mabel Potter Daggett in Pictorial Review.

Baths In Finland.

One of the greatest trials a visitor in Finland has to endure is a Finnish bath. The method of procedure is unique. Divested of outer clothing and attired in a light and airy cotton garment, you are slung in a sort of hammock composed of cord above a large receptacle like the boilers in public laundries. This is almost filled with cold water, into which at the right moment is flung a large redhot brick or piece of iron, which, of course, causes an overwhelming rush of steam to ascend and almost choke you. Then when that process has gone on sufficiently long you are shaken out of your hammock, immersed in cold water, and after very drastic treatment you resume your raiment, sadder and wiser than before your novel experience.

One way to relieve habitual constipation is to take regularly a mild laxative. Doan's Regulets are recommmended for this purpose. 25c a box at all drug stores.

THE CUPID EXPRESS

A Comedy of Love

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Trentham people always called the 6:36 train "the Cupid express," because it invariably carried one or more bridal couples.

It was the close of a March day, exactly 6:36 p. m., and the Cupid express had just snorted away cityward with two of Trentham's fair brides and incidentally the newly made husbands.

The Faber twins had just been married. It was a double wedding, and all the town had turned out to send them off with a suitable merrymaking.

"Where is Edith?" inquired Mrs. William Blake, craning her neck around the carriage. "Where is Edith?" she repeated sternly as her niece took her place in the surrey.

Cora Morris' voice was guilty.

"Edith is walking home," she said.

Mrs. Blake drew a sharp breath.

"Walking?" she interrogated.

Cora nodded, but her face beneath the white hood of her cloak was serious.

"Not alone?" declared Mrs. Blake in the decisive tone of one who knew.

"With Harley Lane," confessed Cora.

"Ah!" Mrs. Blake's tone was freezing. She sank back in her seat and was silent. Bitter thoughts crowded her mind.

It was like an unkind fate to decree that her only child, Edith, should fall in love with Judge Lane's son.

She had always tried to keep them apart and was openly rude to young Lane. And Harley was disconcertingly polite to her.

"Mrs. Blake would be the jolliest woman in the world if she would only forget her grouch against the world," said her would be son-in-law to his father one day.

But the judge had frowned and looked very uncomfortable.

"I wonder why your mother is so set against me," remarked Harley as he tucked Edith's hand under his arm and marched down the street.

Edith's eyelashes flickered as the surrey passed them at a corner where a street lamp shone brightly.

"I don't believe she really hates you, Harley," she said, "but some one has whispered a bit of ancient history to me. Years ago mother was engaged to marry your father. They quarreled, and neither forgave the other. Both married. There you are, sir!"

"The deuce!" whistled Harley; then he added hastily: "They've both been widowed for fifteen years. Why didn't they marry each other?"

"I don't know," sighed Edith. "They couldn't really have cared."

"Dear, do you know I was wishing that you and I had courage to throw conventions to the four winds and elope on the Cupid express some day!"

"They would never forgive us, dear," murmured Edith, "and we couldn't really be happy if they didn't."

"I know it. There's only one thing to do, then—to convert them to our way of thinking."

"How can we do that?"

"I didn't have an idea until you told me that once they had been sweethearts. Listen to this scheme."

Mrs. Blake saw them lingering at the front gate. Her handsome face grew sterner, and her lips straightened into a thin line.

Her hands smote sharply together in a passion of wounded pride.

"His son—of all men!" she moaned softly.

* * * * * * *

One April afternoon Mrs. Blake returned from her euchre club to find the house strangely silent.

"Miss Edith?" repeated Jane, the maid. "Why, Miss Edith left the house an hour ago. She carried a suit case and"—

"A suit case?" interrupted Mrs. Blake. "Did she say where she was going?"

"No, ma'am. I wouldn't have known about it only I heard the front door close, and I looked and saw Miss Edith running down the walk. A cab was there. She jumped in and was off!"

"Very likely she has been called over to her cousin's in South Trentham. She will telephone to me no doubt."

The clock in the hall chimed the quarter after 6, and mingled with it was the sharp, insistent tinkle of the telephone bell.

Winona Blake's voice shook a little as she lifted the receiver from its hook.

"Yes?" she inquired.

It was Edith's voice, speaking in tremulous excitement.

"Mother, dear," she quavered, "would you consent to my—my marrying Harley?"

An instant's silence, then the mother's voice, cold and terrible:

"No daughter of mine ever will marry him!"

"Mother!" Edith's voice was stricken.

"Where are you?" asked Mrs. Blake.

"The railroad station."

"Wait until I come!" ordered Mrs. Blake, and, hanging up the receiver, she rushed from the house, still wearing her hat and her most becoming afternoon gown.

There was no time to call Thomas. Before he could harness one of the lazy blacks into the runabout the Cupid express would be away from the station!

As Mrs. Blake hurried up the stairs she heard the thunder of the approaching train. Her lips tightened.

"I will go along, too!" she thought. "Edith is a minor, and"—

"Here, madam!" A conductor almost lifted her to the steps, and as she staggered across the platform into the coach a shower of small particles fell stingingly upon her face.

"Rice!" called somebody from the coach behind.

"Where's the bridegroom?" some one asked in a loud whisper.

"The old party in the gray overcoat. See the confetti on his hat?"

And at this moment Mrs. Blake collided with some one in the aisle. They grasped each other and swayed with the moving train.

"You?" glared Mrs. Blake.

"You?" glared Judge Lane.

A murmur ran through the car. Smiles spread from face to face, for was not this the honeymoon train, and did they not recognize a bridal couple?

They did.

There was the handsome middle aged pair in gala attire; there was the confetti, rice. Somewhere in the rear a light headed youth whistled the wedding march from "Lohengrin."

Furiously embarrassed, angry and quite helpless in the face of so many whole hearted strangers, Judge Lane accepted the nearest proffered seat and pushed the equally embarrassed, angry and helpless lady into it.

"We may as well sit down," he snapped.

"Yes!" she gasped. "Of course you know why I'm here?"

"I'm on the same errand. I was searching the train when I met you. Harley telephoned me for my blessing before they were married. Bah!"

"Tickets, please!" smiled the conductor.

Mrs. Blake suffered a cold chill. Her pocketbook was at home. Could she accept money from John Lane?

She did, for without asking her permission he opened a bulging pocketbook and paid for both tickets.

Grinningly the conductor punched the rebate checks and gave them to the man.

"Congratulations, judge," he said as he moved along. "I knew the Cupid would catch you some day!"

A cold horror settled upon the two in the seat. So they were supposed to be a newly wedded pair!

Both were thinking of one day thirty years ago when they plighted their troth in the apple orchard beneath a snow of blossoms.

It was before the day of the Cupid express, but they had planned a wedding journey, and it had never come to pass.

And now, each one in pursuit of an eloping child, they had met after all these years. People believed they were a honeymoon couple!

"Absurd!" declared Mrs. Blake aloud.

"Ridiculous!" huskily agreed the judge.

"Perhaps you had better see if they are on the train," suggested Mrs. Blake after awhile.

"That's a good idea!" and Judge Lane escaped to the rear coaches.

After awhile he came back.

"They are not on the train," he said slowly.

"How odd!" cried Mrs. Blake. "But, then, Edith didn't say she was married. She only asked permission, and as she was telephoning from the railroad station I concluded they were going to take this train."

"So I inferred from Harley's message," responded the judge stiffly.

"I hope they are not married. It is out of the question!" went on Mrs Blake.

"Out of the question," agreed the judge.

A silence fell between them, and then Mrs. Blake felt a blush creeping over her smooth, pale cheek.

Was he looking at her?

Slowly her eyes turned toward him, until, through her lashes, she could see his blue eyes regarding her with an odd wistfulness.

"Absurd!" she chided herself sharply.

"Winnie," he whispered suddenly, "you haven't forgotten, after all?"

"I never could, John," she whispered in return.

"Then let this be our wedding trip," he urged after awhile.

"But we must return tonight," she cried hastily. "I must be sure about Edith."

"And Harley," he added.

"About Edith and Harley," she gently corrected herself.

* * * * * * *

When the 11:15 train from town drew into Trentham that night it found two anxious young people pacing the platform.

"They will never forgive us for luring them aboard that Cupid train," said Edith nervously.

"They might," Harley smiled cryptically. "Here they are, Edith. Together—and looking sheepish. Why, father," he said reproachfully, "I've been worried to death about you! Where have you been?"

The judge blushed and clung to his wife's hand. "Why, we've been getting married!"

"Married!" echoed Edith. "Without saying a word to me? Why, mother!"

"But you and Harley have married without consulting us"—

"Married?" interrupted Edith innocently. "Why, mother, dear, I wouldn't marry without your blessing. And I want a home wedding, with all my friends and heaps of presents—and we shall take the Cupid express, shan't we, Harley?"

A smile flickered on Harley's face.

"Sure we will, if dad doesn't object."

But the bride and bridegroom, walking ahead, were so absorbed in each other that they never answered the question. But, as Harley told his sweetheart, it was one of those questions that answered themselves.

ELIJAH'S FLIGHT AND HIS VISION

1 Kings 19:3-18.—September 12.

Jezebel Unrepentant—Ahab Upholds Her—Elijah's Life Threatened—He Flees, Discouraged—God Granted Him a Vision of the Future—The Wind, the Earthquake, the Fire, the Still, Small Voice—What These Signify Now to the Antitypical Elijah Class.

ELIJAH expected that, after three and a half years of Divine chastisement, followed by a special manifestation of Divine Power against the representatives of Baal, the true God and the true religion would have a measure of prosperity with the people. Surprised to find Queen Jezebel as murderous as ever, and King Ahab dominated by her influence, Elijah fled, sadly discouraged. After a long sleep, relieving his nervous strain, the Lord gave him through an angel a special message of comfort, and food which lasted him for forty days, until he came to the Mount of God—Horeb.

There Elijah went through a series of experiences (whether literal or in vision we may not be too certain) in which the Lord was to reveal Himself. First came the winds, rending the rocks; but God was not in the winds. Next came the earthquake; but God was not in the earthquake. Then followed the devouring fire; but God was not in the fire. Finally came the still, small Voice, which Luther's translation renders, "The Voice of Eden." God was in the Voice—it truly represented Him.

Elijah and the Angel.

This narrative multiplies in force to Bible students when they realize that all these occurrences foreshadowed experiences with which the Church in the flesh is intimately connected. Jezebel still represents a form of godliness great and boastful, supported by earthly power, represented in King Ahab. The picture intimates that the great social and religious upheaval of a century ago did not deeply affect nor greatly alter the outward attitude of the Church nominal and the world toward the true Church of Christ in the flesh, typified by the Prophet Elijah. The reformation was partial only. Great institutions still upheld many of the serious errors of the past. The Elijah class again passed out of public view, though not out of communion and fellowship with God. Divine supervision providing for their necessities of rest and spiritual refreshment.

What the Elijah Class See.

Mount Horeb, "the Mount of God," fitly represented Messiah's Kingdom. Elijah's coming to it portrayed the fact that the Church will be in and under the Kingdom administration while still in the flesh, although the last members of the Church will not fully participate in the Kingdom honors until they shall have experienced their great resurrection "change." (1 Corinthians 15:50-52.) Many Bible students understand that chronologically Messiah's Kingdom began its operation in the world in 1878, while the last members of the Elijah class are still in the flesh. How soon the entire company of the Elijah class will pass beyond the veil and the Kingdom be ushered in with power and great glory is not definitely stated in the Bible.

Bible students the world over have been receiving of the Lord a special vision of the future. Through Bible study they have been learning that Messiah's Kingdom is to be inaugurated in "a Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation"—"no, nor ever shall be" afterwards. (Daniel 12:1; Matthew 24:21.) They have learned that the winds of strife, the present war, have been held back for years by Divine Power, when God's people have been assisted in Bible study, symbolically called the sealing of the saints in their foreheads.—Rev. 7:1-4.

This class see the four parts of the great Divine Program ushering in the Kingdom of God, for which so long His saints have prayed, "Thy Kingdom come." They see that the winds represent the war; that the earthquake of Elijah's vision represented a great social revolution, to follow the war; that following the revolution, anarchy is to be expected, symbolized by fire, destroying present institutions.

Elijah hearing the voice of the Lord.

In none of these great experiences coming to the world will God be manifest. They will be merely preparatory, to fit man for the Voice of Eden, which subsequently will be heard, bringing the Message which will be "the desire of all nations."

Fulfilment of the Vision Begun.

Bible students understand that these four great features of God's Plan portrayed to Elijah have already begun a fulfilment—that the present European war is the letting loose of "the four winds of heaven"—winds of strife. The fact that Elijah saw these things before he was taken up should not be understood to mean that all these experiences will be past before the Church is "changed," but rather that these things are identified with the inauguration of the Kingdom.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to section eight of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:—

Amend section eight, article nine of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

"Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which now exceeds seven per centum of such assessed valuation, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum, in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation, except that any debt or debts hereinafter incurred by the city and county of Philadelphia for the construction and development of subways for transit purposes, or for the construction of wharves and docks, or the reclamation of land to be used in the construction of a system of wharves and docks, as public improvements, owned or to be owned by said city and county of Philadelphia, and which shall yield to the city and county of Philadelphia current net revenues in excess of the interest on said debt or debts, and the annual installments necessary for the cancellation of said debt or debts, may be excluded in ascertaining the power of the city and county of Philadelphia to become otherwise indebted: Provided, That a sinking-fund for their cancellation shall be established and maintained," so that it shall read as follows:—

Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the consent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which on the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, exceeded seven per centum of such assessed valuation, and has not since been reduced to less than such per centum, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation. The city of Philadelphia, upon the conditions hereinafter set forth, may increase its indebtedness to the extent of three per centum in excess of seven per centum upon such assessed valuation for the specific purpose of providing for all or any of the following purposes—to wit: For the construction and improvement of subways, tunnels, railways, elevated railways, and other transit facilities; for the construction and improvement of wharves and docks and for the reclamation of land to be used in the construction of wharves and docks, owned or to be owned by said city. Such increase, however, shall only be made with the assent of the electors thereof at a public election, to be held in such manner as shall be provided by law. In ascertaining the borrowing capacity of said city of Philadelphia, at any time, there shall be excluded from the calculation a credit, where the work resulting from any previous expenditure, for any one or more of the specific purposes hereinabove enumerated shall be yielding to said city an annual current net revenue, the amount of which credit shall be ascertained by capitalizing the annual net revenue during the year immediately preceding the time of such ascertainment. Such capitalization shall be accomplished by ascertaining the principal amount which would yield such annual, current net revenue, at the average rate of interest, and sinking-fund charges payable upon the indebtedness incurred by said city for such purposes, up to the time of such ascertainment. The method of determining such amount, so to be excluded or allowed as a credit, may be prescribed by the General Assembly.

In incurring indebtedness, for any one, or more of said purposes of construction, improvement, or reclamation, the city of Philadelphia may issue its obligations maturing not later than fifty years from the date thereof, with provision for a sinking-fund sufficient to retire said obligation at maturity, the payments to such sinking-fund to be in equal or graded annual instalments. Such obligations may be in an amount sufficient to provide for and may include the amount of the interest and sinking-fund charges accruing and which may accrue thereon throughout the period of construction and until the expiration of one year after the completion of the work for which said indebtedness shall have been incurred; and said city shall not be required to levy a tax to pay said interest and sinking-fund charges, as required by section ten of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, until the expiration of said period of one year after the completion of such work.

No act shall prescribe any limitations of time within which suits may be brought against corporations for injuries to persons or property, or for other causes different from those fixed by general laws regulating actions against natural persons, and such acts now existing are avoided," so that it shall read as follows:

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of this Commonwealth in accordance with provisions of the eighteenth (XVIII) article thereof.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth (XVIII) article thereof:—

AMENDMENT.

Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring of and guaranteeing land titles by the State, or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interest in lands the titles to which are so registered, transferred, insured, and guaranteed; and for the creation and collection of indemnity funds; and for carrying the system and powers hereby provided for into effect by such existing courts as may be designated by the Legislature, and by the establishment of such new courts as may be deemed necessary. In matters arising in and under the operation of such system, judicial powers, with right of appeal, may be conferred by the Legislature upon county recorders and upon other officers by it designated. Such laws may provide for continuing the registering, transferring, insuring, and guaranteeing such titles after the first or original registration has been perfected by the court, and provision may be made for raising the necessary funds for expenses and salaries of officers, which shall be paid out of the treasury of the several counties.

The Cocoa Plantation.

A traveler in South America, where the cocoa tree is largely cultivated, speaks of the great care with which the young plants have to be protected from the sun, which if very strong is fatal to them. To secure this protection the planters shield them by banana trees and plantain trees, the broad leaves of which give them the needed shade. And even when they are fully grown they need protection, which is given by trees known as "immortels," or, as the planters call them, "the mother of the cocoa." Thus the whole cocoa plantation has a sort of canopy.

The Member For Calais.

There was a time when Calais was represented in the English parliament. It was in the reign of Henry VIII. that Calais was granted the right to send its representative to Westminster, and the names of some of its members have been preserved. Its last sitting member, for instance, was one Edmund Peyton, alderman of Calais.—London Standard.

LIKE A SUBMARINE

The Fur Seal In Many Ways Resembles an Undersea Boat.

ITS HABITS IN THE WATER.

Although It Can Swim Only When Submerged and Must Rise to the Surface Every Few Minutes, It Is a Marvel of Speed.

We have come to regard the soaring albatross or the condor as the prototype of the aeroplane. When we look for a natural model for the submarine we find it well made in the body of the fur seal and fully suggested by its method of progression in the sea, for it travels there only when wholly submerged.

Unlike, however, the "unterseebote," the fur seal is not fitted for swimming on the surface; it only rises there to survey, to breathe and to sleep. It never attempts to swim with head above water on any course, no matter how short. It rises when undisturbed or not alarmed, looks about with head and neck well stretched up above the surface of the sea, fills its lungs with air (literally compressed), turns its head down and with its powerful anterior flippers drives itself below the surface to the depth of five or ten feet, then ahead on that level. Thus submerged the body of the seal glides through the water as swiftly as a swallow in the air—it is a vanishing streak to our eyes.

How long it remains thus submerged when traveling no one has any definite knowledge, but the best consensus of opinion gives it a rise at intervals of every three or four minutes to breathe—that is, a pause of less than two or three seconds, with barely more than its nose and eyes above the surface, for exhalation and renewed inhalation—when down goes the trim body to speed ahead again.

When our submarines were first brought out a trip of more than 300 miles from base was the utmost limit of their cruising. Today they have been so perfected that they can cruise safely more than 3,000 miles from that base. Therefore in this connection it is interesting to know that the fur seal makes a submarine journey in the north Pacific ocean of more than 5,000 miles from its base on the Pribilof islands, in Bering sea, and then returns.

An animal which can not only make such an extended journey, but can steer its course over an uncharted waste from point to point, month by month, with positive regularity and in perfect time, must be a fine type of swimming machine, and it is.

There is to be observed a close resemblance between the cigar shaped submarine boat and the body form of the fur seal. As we view them laterally, this resemblance is complete. They are both driven ahead by feathering screws, and they are both kept on the level of their submerged course at a given distance below the surface by rudders.

Then we observe that the periscope, to which the submarine craft owes all of its efficiency, is duplicated exactly by the seal's nose and eyes and which are all that it ever lifts above the surface when startled and in flight of passage.

Again we note that the fur seal as a submarine has a great advantage over the human boat—it has eyes that can look ahead and around under water—how far we do not know, but it is reasonable to assume that the seal's eye can see as far under water as the eye of a camera can, which we have the evidence of in good records.

Then, too, it also has an acute sense of hearing under sea, for we know that the whirring of a propeller's screw will drive all the seals away for miles around a steamer. We know that because some of the early pelagic sealing vessels were fitted with small auxiliary screws, and these, when put into use, had to be removed.

With reference to the powers of destruction, of course our fur seal boat has no torpedo tubes, but it can and does "shoot its mouth off" at fish with a deadly certainty.

In this connection it is interesting to note that seals do not catch fish by pursuit of them—not at all. They shoot down from above upon the backs or up from below to strike at the bellies of their finny prey.

How fast these phocine submarines can speed up under the stimulus of excitement or fear no one knows. But it is well known when a vessel is coming down before a gale of wind from the islands, logging fourteen to sixteen knots, that a bevy of fur seals will often follow the ship for hours and repeatedly swim by it, swim around it and then renew the chase and circling of it.—Henry W. Elliott in New York Times.

We should remember that education commences in the cradle and terminates in the grave.

It may be important to know that the sting of a bee will cure hiccoughs, but a cheaper way is to swear off.

Then of course, as has been remarked before, anybody who really wants to know where the Brittish fleet is can find out at slight expense by putting to sea under the German flag.

We profess to know little about strategy and less about Georgia justice, but we shouldn't consider it taking any chance at all to wager that the war will be over before Frank's murderers are punished.

If Spain with a British-born Queen goes over to the Germans, while Greece, with the Kaiser's sister on the throne, goes in for the Allies, it will be difficult to prove that blood, when it's blue, is any thicker than water.

Aow many deliberate or think what they will do, and reach the close of their earthly career and pilgrimage, without coming to any determination, either of profit to themselves or otherwise miserable must this reflection be when such a man, in the decline of life, considers how unprofitable he has been to himself, to his fellow creatures, and above all to his creator.

The idea of a propaganda in a nation of a hundred million people seems absurd. The fact is the great mass of our citizens are at heart genuine Americans. And any act by either biligerent which made plain its official antagonism to this Government or to the vital interests of our people would instantly unite them in the defense of their country. If it ever comes to the point where America breaks with any foreign nations these citizens will show that they have no divided patriotism.

They are divided now on the war issues because they do not realize that their country has any vital interest at stake. But if Germany, officially or unofficially, has been spending money with the idea it could manufacture Pro-German sentiment in America which would prevent our standing for our rights, that money has been thrown away.

It is alleged that one Mitchell A. Palmer of Pennsylvania, one of the leaders of the reorganized Democracy, and one who stood very close to the President, is charged with giving away secrets pertaining to our navy and general unpreparedness of conditions in case we should become involved with some Foreign Power. And it is further alleged that Mr. Wilson is very much displeased with the existing reports. It must be distinctly understood that American opinions are not for sale. If German's diplomatic agents in the United States have been back of an organized pro-German propaganda here, they have been guilty of an offense which justifies a demand for their immediate recall. The Government at Washington has no proof that Von Bernstorff or any lesser officials of the Embassy have been guilty of such an offense. And the country at large can well afford to wait until proof is forthcoming. Our Government at Washington still has the passport frauds under consideration. It will have to add this further charge to its investigation. We can afford to suspend judgment until official action is taken and we get the facts from Washington.

The observer may easily fall into error in comparing the retreat of the Russians to the retreat of the French and English which culminated in the German defeat at the battle of the marve.

For in France last year the fortified line at the eastern end of the long battlefield held firm. The left wing of the Allies was bent back, but the right held, as it holds today. Even then, according to experts, only Von Kluck's error in crossing in front of Paris and exposing himself to attack while on the march made German defeat possible. But the Russian line seems unable to hold at any point. And if the Germans can break through whereever they choose by massing men, there appears to be no opportunity for Russia to repeat the brilliant stroke which foiled the German offensive in France. A hundred conditions enter into such a problem as this which are unknown to anyone save the opposing commanders. But, judging by what is known, there seems to be but little chance of Russia escaping a disastrous defeat. And the elimination of Russia means German victory.

Mr. Bryan says Americans ought not to endanger their country's foreign relations by exercising their rights as citizens of a neutral state. The question at issue, he says, is not whether Americans have the right to travel through the danger zone, "that is admitted." Who admits it? Germany doesn't. And if we abandon it now for Germany, we abandon it for all time for any belligerent sovereignty that, in the future, chooses to close any part of the high seas to American citizens.

If Germany, fighting for her life, can close one section of the high seas to Americans, Germany triumphant, or any other state, can close them all, and shut up a nation of a hundred million people within its own three mile limit. If the seas are not open to neutrals now, they never will be again. It is not a question of policy or expediency. It is a question of a dearly-bought right which will be taken from us for all time if we fail to maintain it.

COINS FOR OTHER LANDS.

South American Money Is Made In Our Mints at Cost Price.

"Made In the United States" might in all truth be stamped on the coins of nearly a dozen of the countries of Latin America in which a shopper would try in vain to buy merchandise bearing that slogan, for, though the United States does not ship great amounts of goods to the countries between the Rio Grande river and Cape Horn, it does supply them with a large part of their money, says the Washington Star, and this, in spite of the Spanish phrases and foreign emblems that it bears, is the product of Uncle Sam's own mints.

Since the authorization to coin money for foreign countries was given to the mints by congress in January, 1874, more than 100,000,000 pieces of gold, silver and baser metals have been minted for countries in North, South and Central America and the West Indies and for Hawaii before its annexation.

All foreign minting by the United States is done at a price that just covers the cost. There are two reasons for the government engaging in the business. It puts this country in a position to do neighborly acts, and it allows us to keep our coining equipment and force of operatives busy during periods when it would otherwise be necessary to suspend operations. The decreasing need for mints with our vast accumulations of coins, the growth of banking and the use of paper money is shown by the fact that of the seven mints that have been in existence in the history of the country only three are now equipped for turning out coins, the others having been either abandoned or turned into assay offices.

The Lacking Stroke.

"Do you think it would improve my style," inquired the varsity man who had got into the crew through favoritism, "if I were to acquire a faster stroke?"

"It would improve the crew," replied the candid trainer, "if you got a paralytic stroke."—London Tit-Bits.

Grim Nickname.

It is said that a former postmaster general of Guatemala was nicknamed "mata muertos," which is to say "knifer of dead persons." He is supposed to have stabbed the dead body of a murdered president as it lay in the street.—London Telegraph.

The Chinese laugh is not so expressive as the European; it is usually a titter rather than a genuine outburst of merriment.—London Telegraph.

Mrs. Ellen B Weiser Dead.

Mrs. Ellen B. Weiser, widow of the late Benjamin F. Weiser, died of paralysis on Tuesday morning at 9.30 o'clock, in the home of her son, John H. Weiser, at Tusseyville. The deceased was born February 16, 1849, and on December 30, 1875, was united in marriage to the beloved husband who preceded her to the greater life beyond the grave. She is survived by four children: Mrs. E. J. Miller, of Altoona; Charles C. Weiser, of Pasadena, Cal.; J. H., of Tusseyville, and Edwin, of Millheim. Funeral services will be held on Friday morning at 9 o'clock and conducted in the Millheim Lutheran church.

On account of an outbreak of septumas fever in the barrens pasture lands many cattle are dying. A number of cattle are dying from bloat caused by eating young clover during the rainy period. It is always dangerous to turn out young cattle among young clover. Among the losers the past week are Samuel Campbell, one cow; William Lytle, one cow; Frank Swabb, two cows; Mack Fry, one cow; Ray Williams, one cow. Some farmers had as many as five cows suffering from bloat in one day, but by good luck had the animals pull through.

HEIRS TO DEAD GREATNESS

Victor and Louis Napoleon, "The French Pretenders," Celebrate Their Birthday Same Week.

Both the Napoleon brothers, Victor and Louis, famous for their mirth-provoking act entitled "The French Pretenders," celebrated birthdays recently on the same week. Louis, the younger, passed the half-century mark, while Prince Victor, Napoleon, who would sit on the imperial throne of France if the republic hadn't destroyed that piece of furniture, was fifty-two. Louis was Victor's heir to the pretendership until about a year ago, when a son was born to Victor and his royal spouse, Princess Clementine of Belgium.

Victor is a grandnephew of Emperor Napoleon I. He lives in Brussels, and in 1910 married Clementine, the third daughter of King Leopold I of Belgium. The birth of another Bonaparte was hailed with great delight by the few followers of the pretender and the pretenderess, and the christening of the infant Prince Louis "King of Rome" was marked by imperial pomp and eclat. The ceremony took place in the palatial premises of the proud papa in the Avenue Louise. Most of the imperialists of France were there, and did not crowd the buildings.

Prince Louis, the younger brother of the pretender, is apparently a confirmed bachelor. He served in the Russian army for many years, with rank of lieutenant general, but now resides at Geneva, where the Napoleons own a fine chsteau.

YOU CAN NEVER ASCERTAIN

The Beach Is Evidently a Most Bewildering Place to Size Up Social Pedigrees.

For the last time they met on the beach.

"I am sorry if what I am compelled to say pains you," he said, "but my royal relatives would never consent to my marrying a woman of low blood. Whenever one of us De Bitsies have mixed beneath us our rich blue blood turns in our children to a disagreeable orange color. But, needless to say, I have enjoyed our little affair tremendously, and I trust that we part the best of friends."

"Assuredly, your highness," replied the beautiful thing. "I shall return to my humble job in the kitchen happy in the knowledge that one of your rank has condescended to stoop to my level. And now go, Henry, if you please, here comes my employer."

"The Duke de Swobbits!" exclaimed the other, and moved off just as the famous nobleman joined the beautiful thing.

"Well!" he heard the duke say fondly, "I hope my little American wife hasn't been flirting again!"

"Well, I'm another!" muttered Henry, and, repairing to the barroom of the Seaside pazaz, he donned his apron and began work for the day.

Concerning the Dolomites.

The fairyland about Cortina is familiar to thousands of English tourists as "The Dolomites." Dolomite, a rock compounded of carbonate of lime and carbonate of magnesia, takes its name from the French geologist "Deodat de Gratet, Marquis de Dolomeiu," who spent his time in 1789 and the following year, while his countrymen were busy with revolution and war, in visiting this and other Alpine districts. He first mentions this kind of rock in 1791, and the word "Dolomite" first occurs in a pamphlet of 1802 describing a tour of his in the Alps about the St. Gothard and the Simplon. The curious point, noted by Mr. Coolidge, is that the marquis seems to have paid no attention to the dolomite rocks in the neighborhood of his own home, Dolomeiu, near Grenoble.—London Chronicle.

Made Him Ache All Over.

The little cottage is of that capacity where there is always room for one more. One night small Tommy had to be awakened and his bed made ready for a late and unexpected guest. While they were trying to decide whether to fix his bed in the morris chair or on the floor he fretfully wished they would hurry up. "Why, Tommy," said his mother, "you don't want to be a selfish little boy, do you?" Stretching out and starting for the morris chair, he said: "Mother, I'm so unselfish now I ache all over."

Money Worth of Human Ear.

The value of a human ear has been judicially determined as one-third that of an eye. The momentous decision was made by a New Jersey judge in a suit for personal damages. A workman who had lost the hearing of one ear sued his employers, who contested the case on the ground the New Jersey compensation law made no provision for loss of hearing. The judge decided, however, that the loss of hearing in one ear was tantamount to the loss of the sight of one eye, and awarded the workman $333.33.

Italy's Finest Regiment.

The most imposing regiment in the Italian army is the Corrazzieri, or Royal Bodyguard, which for smartness and physique of man and horse is the most magnificent corps of the kind in Europe. No trooper in the Corrazzieri is less than six feet one or two, while many are far taller, and their wonderful feats of horsemanship are known throughout Europe. Most of the men are comely of feature, as well as splendid of limb, and the large majority of them come from the peasantry.—London Chronicle.

Frank T. Quigley Dead.

Frank T. Quigley, a well known resident of Beech Creek, died at his late home at that place last Saturday morning, his death being caused by paralysis. He had been in declining health for several years and suffered a stroke of paralysis about ten days prior to his death. He gradually became weaker until the end came at the time noted. Surviving are his widow and two daughters: Misses Helen and Lillian, at home; also a sister, Mrs. Mary Robb, of Mechanicsburg, and two brothers, James A. Quigley, of Blanchard, and Charles Quigley, of Lock Haven.

NAVAL SIGNALING.

It Began In Ancient Days by Raising and Lowering Sails.

The origin of the idea of using flags by day and lanterns by night for signaling in the navy came into being as far back as the middle ages.

In those ancient days some one thought out a method of raising and lowering sails, the number of times they were raised or lowered indicating the letter that was to be sent. That proved very wearisome work and was superseded in the seventeenth century by the use of balls and cones hoisted in various positions on the masts and booms. At night different colored lanterns were used.

In the following century twelve flags were used, either singly or in combination, and these flags supplied all the signaling that was necessary in fighting, as "Make all sail," "Engage the enemy," "Chase the enemy" or "Anchor."

When the battle of Trafalgar was fought the signals were sent by light, guns and flares and flags, and it was not till after that battle that the system, invented by Sir Home Popham, was used and on which are based the present day methods of signaling.

The system of signaling from ship to ship by semaphore was due to a Frenchman named Chappe in 1794 and adopted in the British navy a few years later.—London Telegraph.

The Scorpion's Wonderful Ear.

I have studied the habits of the scorpion for many years and have often noticed how very sensitive scorpions are to the most delicate sound, musical or otherwise. Under the thorax the scorpion has two comblike appendages, which are the antennae (pectinatae). It is pretty well settled by physiologists and entomologists that in insects the antennae represent the organs of hearing. These delicate structures are easily affected by the vibrations of sound, and there can be no doubt whatever that they are also affected by sounds quite inaudible to the human ear. The slightest vibration of the atmosphere from any cause whatever at once puts in motion the delicate structures which compose the antennae, to which organs insects owe the power of protecting themselves against danger as well as the means of recognizing the approach of one another.—London Spectator.

Dutch Barges In the Thames.

For more than two centuries there have always been some big, broad sterned Dutch boats lying in the Thames river, with baggy trousered Dutchmen smoking on board, quite calmly. It is the reminiscence of a Dutch conquest. Those boats have moored there, with their eels for London ever since William III. gave them the right of traffic. And if there wasn't a Dutch boat for a single second just below London bridge the ancient rights would be lost. But you will always find the calm Dutchman smoking on his "pitch."—Westminster Gazette.

Held Responsible.

"That dog of yours seems to have human intelligence."

"He ain't that lucky," answered the proprietor of the dog. "If he was to lose his temper an' turn hisself loose to hurt somebody he wouldn't have a chance in the world of pleading insanity."—Washington Star.

SYNOPSIS.

After the finding of Wu Fang's body and Kennedy's disappearance a submarine appears the following morning on the bay. A man plunges overboard from it and swims ashore. It is the entrance of Marcius Del Mar into America. At the Dodge home one of Wu Fang's men is trying to obtain information of Kennedy and the lost torpedo. His plan is blocked by Del Mar's arrival, who also succeeds in winning Elaine's confidence. Later she is warned by a little old man to be careful. Del Mar's mission at the Dodge house was to locate and recover the torpedo. He would have been successful had it not been for Elaine's dog, Rusty, who dug it from the flower pot, while Del Mar and Elaine were talking only a few feet away. Rusty carried the torpedo to the attic. The little old man meets Del Mar at the Dodge home. They draw guns together, gases from the exploded shells of the old man's revolver overcome Del Mar and Elaine, and the old man of mystery escapes. Shortly after this affair Elaine gives a masquerade ball. Del Mar attends. Neither he nor his domino girl can locate the torpedo. A gray friar warns Elaine and Jameson of Del Mar's purpose, and his plans are upset. Del Mar succeeds in getting this girl in Elaine's home as a maid. She finds the torpedo in the attic, places it in a trunk, which with others is sent to Elaine's country home. A holdup on the train takes place. Del Mar's men carry the trunk away only to find on opening it that they have the wrong one.

TWENTY-SEVENTH EPISODE

THE DESTROYED TORPEDO.

Del Mar had evidently, by this time, come to the conclusion that Elaine was the storm center of the peculiar train of events that followed the disappearance of Kennedy and his wireless torpedo.

At any rate, as soon as he learned that Elaine was going to her country home for the summer, he took a bungalow some distance from Dodge Hall.

There, on the day that Elaine decided to motor in from the city, Del Mar arrived with his valet.

Evidently he lost no time in getting to work on his own affairs, whatever they might be. Inside his study, which was the largest room in the house, a combination of both library and laboratory, he gave an order or two to his valet, then immediately sat down to his new desk. He opened a drawer and took out a long, hollow cylinder, closed at each end by air-tight caps, on one of which was a hook.

Quickly he wrote a note and read it over: "Install submarine bell in place of these clumsy tubes. Am having harbor and bridges mined as per instructions from government. D."

He unscrewed the cap at one end of the tube, inserted the note and closed it. Then he pushed a button on his desk. A panel in the wall opened and one of the men who had played policeman once for him stepped out and saluted.

"Here's a message to send below," said Del Mar briefly.

The man bowed and went back through the panel, closing it.

Del Mar cleaned up his desk and then went out to look his new quarters over, to see whether everything had been prepared according to his instructions.

From the concealed entrance to a cave on a hillside, Del Mar's man who had gone through the panel in the bungalow appeared a few minutes later and hurried down to the shore. It was a rocky coast with stretches of cliffs and now and then a ravine and a bit of sandy beach. Gingerly he climbed down the rocks to the water.

He took from his pocket the metal tube which Del Mar had given him and to the hook on one end attached a weight of lead. A moment he looked about cautiously. Then he threw the tube into the water and it sank quickly. He did not wait, but hurried back into the cave entrance.

Elaine, Aunt Josephine and I motored down to Dodge Hall from the city. Elaine's country house was on a fine estate near the Long Island Sound and after the long run we were glad to pull up before the big house and get out of the car. As we approached the door I happened to look down the road.

"Well, that's the country, all right," I exclaimed, pointing down the road. "Look."

Lumbering along was a huge, heavy hayrack on top of which perched a farmer chewing a straw. Following along after him was a dog of a peculiar shepherd breed which I did not recognize. Atop of the hay the old fellow had piled a trunk and a basket.

To our surprise the hayrack stopped before the house. "Miss Dodge?" drawled the farmer nasally.

"Why, what do you suppose he can want?" asked Elaine moving out toward the wagon while we followed. "Yes."

"Here's a trunk, Miss Dodge, with your name on it," he went on dragging it down. "I found it down by the railroad track."

It was the trunk marked "E. Dodge" which had been thrown off the train, taken by Del Mar and rifled by the motorcyclist.

"How do you suppose it ever got here?" cried Elaine in wonder.

"Must have fallen off the train," I suggested. "You might have collected the insurance under this new baggage law!"

"Jennings," called Elaine. "Get Patrick and carry the trunk in."

Together the butler and the gardener dragged it off.

"Thank you," said Elaine, endeavoring to pay the farmer.

"No, no, miss," he demurred as he clucked to his horses.

We waved to the old fellow. As he started to drive away, he reached down into the basket and drew out some yellow harvest apples. One at a time he tossed them to us as he lumbered off.

"Truly rural," remarked a voice behind us.

It was Del Mar, all togged up and carrying a magazine in his hand.

We chatted a moment, then Elaine started to go into the house with Aunt Josephine. With Del Mar I followed.

As she went Elaine took a bite of the apple. To her surprise it separated neatly into two hollow halves. She looked inside. There was a note. Carefully she unfolded it and read. Like the others, it was not written but printed in pencil:

Be careful to unpack all your trunks yourself. Destroy this note. A Friend.

What did these mysterious warnings mean, she asked herself in amazement. Somehow so far they had worked out all right. She tore up the note and threw the pieces away.

Elaine went into the house and we followed. Del Mar, however, dropped just a bit behind and, as he came to the place where Elaine had thrown the pieces of paper, dropped his magazine. He stooped to pick it up and gathered the pieces, then rejoined us.

"I hope you'll excuse me," said Elaine brightly. "We've just arrived and I haven't a thing unpacked."

Del Mar bowed and Elaine left us. Aunt Josephine followed shortly. Del Mar and I sat down at a table. As he talked he placed the magazine in his lap beneath the table, on his knees. I could not see, but he was in reality secretly putting together the torn note which the farmer had thrown to Elaine.

Finally he managed to fit all the pieces. A glance down was enough. But his face betrayed nothing. Still under the table, he swept the pieces into his pocket and rose.

"I'll drop in when you are more settled," he excused himself, strolling leisurely out again.

* * * * * * *

Up in the bedroom Elaine's maid, Marie, had been unpacking.

"Well, what do you know about that?" she exclaimed as Jennings and Patrick came dragging in the banged-up trunk.

"Very queer," remarked Jennings, detailing the little he had seen, while Patrick left.

The entrance of Elaine put an end to the interesting gossip and Marie started to open the trunk.

"No, Marie," said Elaine. "I'll unpack them myself. You can put the things away later. You and Jennings may go."

Quickly she took the things out of the battered trunk. Then she started on the other trunk, which was like it but not marked. She threw out a couple of garments, then paused, startled.

There was the lost torpedo—where Bertholdi had stuck it in her haste! Elaine picked it up and looked at it in wonder, as it recalled all these last days before Kennedy was lost.

Finally she decided to lock it up in the bureau drawer and tell me. Not only did she lock the drawer, but, as she left her room, she took the key of the door from the lock inside and locked it outside.

* * * * * * *

Del Mar did not go far from the house, however. He scarcely reached the edge of the grounds where he was sure he was not observed when he placed his fingers to his lips and whistled. An instant later two of his men appeared from behind a hedge.

"You must get into her room," he ordered. "That torpedo is in her luggage somewhere, after all."

In the rear of the house the two emissaries of Del Mar stole out of the shelter of some bushes and stood for a moment looking. Elaine's windows were high above them, too high to reach.

"We'll have to use the Dutch housemaid's methods," decided one.

Together they went around the house toward the laundry. It was only a few minutes later that they returned. No one was about. Quickly one of them took off his coat. Around his waist he had wound a coil of rope. Deftly he began to climb a tree whose upper branches fell over the roof. Catlike he managed to reach the roof. He made his way along the ridge pole to a chimney which was directly back of and in line with Elaine's windows. Then he uncoiled the rope and made one end fast to the chimney. Letting the other end fall free down the roof, he carefully lowered himself over the edge. Thus it was not difficult to get into Elaine's room by stepping on the window sill and going through the open window.

The man began a rapid search of the room, turning up and pawing everything that Elaine had unpacked. Then he began on the little writing desk, the dresser and the bureau drawers. A subtle smile flashed over his face as he came to one drawer that was locked. He pulled a sectional jimmy from his coat and forced it open.

There lay the precious torpedo.

The man clutched at it with a look of exultation. Without another glace at the room he rushed to the window, seized the rope and pulled himself to the roof, going as he had come.

* * * * * * *

It did not take me long to unpack the few things I had brought and I was soon back again in the living room, where Aunt Josephine joined me in a few minutes.

Just as Elaine came hurriedly down the stairway and started toward me, Del Mar entered from the porch. She stopped. Del Mar watched her closely. Had she found anything? He was sure of it.

Her hesitation was only for a moment, however. "Walter," she said, "may I speak to you a moment? Excuse us, please?"

Aunt Josephine went out toward the back of the house to see how the servants were getting on, while I followed Elaine upstairs. Del Mar with a bow seated himself and opened his magazine. No sooner had we gone, however, than he laid it down and cautiously followed us.

Elaine was evidently very much excited as she enterd her dainty little room and closed the door. "Walter," she cried, "I've found the torpedo!"

We looked about at the general disorder. "Why," she exclaimed nervously, "someone has been here—and I locked the door, too."

She almost ran over to her bureau drawer. It had been jimmied open in the few minutes while she was downstairs. The torpedo was gone. We looked at each other, aghast.

Behind us, however, we did not see the keen and watchful eyes of Del Mar, opening the door and peering in.

* * * * * * *

Perhaps half a mile down the road, the farmer abandoned his hayrack and now, followed by his peculiar dog, walked back. He stopped at a point in the road where he could see the Dodge house in the distance, sat on the rail fence and lighted a blackened corncob pipe.

There he sat for some time apparently engrossed in his own thoughts about the weather, the dog lying at his feet. Now and then he looked fixedly toward Dodge Hall.

Suddenly his vigilant attention seemed to be riveted on the house. He drew a field glass from his pocket and leveled it. Sure enough, there was a man coming out of a window, pulling himself up to the roof by a rope and going across the rooftree. He lowered the glasses quickly and climbed off the fence with a hitherto unworked energy.

"Come, Searchlight," he called to the dog, as together they moved off quickly in the direction he had been looking.

Del Mar's men were coming through the hedge that surrounded the Dodge estate just as the farmer and his dog stepped out in front of them from behind a thicket.

"Just a minute," he called. "I want to speak to you."

He enforced his words with a vicious looking gun. It was two to one and they closed with him. Before he could shoot, they had knocked the gun out of his hand. Then they tried to break away and run.

But the farmer seized one of them and held him. Meanwhile the dog developed traits all his own. He ran in and out between the legs of the other man until he threw him. There he stood, over him. The man attempted to rise. Again the dog threw him and kept him down. He was a trained Belgian sheep hound, a splendid police dog.

"Confound the brute," growled the man, reaching for his gun.

As he drew it, the dog seized his wrist and with a cry the man dropped the gun. That, too, was part of the dog's training.

While the farmer and the other man struggled on the ground, the torpedo worked its way half from the man's pocket. The farmer seized it. The man fell back, limp, and the farmer, with the torpedo in one hand, grasped at the gun on the ground and straightened up.

He had no sooner risen than the man was at him again. His unconsciousness had been merely feigned. The struggle was renewed.

At that point, the hedge down the road parted and Del Mar stepped out. A glance was enough to tell him what was going on. He drew his gun and ran swiftly toward the combatants.

As Del Mar approached, his man succeeded in knocking the torpedo from the farmer's hand. There it lay, several feet away. There seemed to be no chance for either man to get it.

Quickly the farmer bent his wrist, aiming the gun deliberately at the precious torpedo. As fast as he could he pulled the trigger. Five of the six shots penetrated the little model.

So surprised was his antagonist that the farmer was able to knock him out with the butt of his gun. He broke away and fled, whistling on a police whistle for the dog just as Del Mar ran up.

Del Mar stopped and picked up the model. It had been shot into an unrecognizable mass of scrap. In a fury, Del Mar dashed it on the ground, cursing his men as he did so.

* * * * * * *

The strange disappearance of the torpedo model from Elaine's room worried both of us. Doubtless if Kennedy had been there he would have known just what to do. But we could not decide.

"Really," considered Elaine, "I think we had better take Mr. Del Mar into our confidence.

"Still, we've had a great many warnings," I objected.

"I know that," she persisted, "but they have all come from very unreliable sources."

"Very well," I agreed finally, "then let's drive over to his bungalow."

Elaine ordered her little runabout and a few moments later we climbed into it and Elaine shot the car away.

As we rode along, the country seemed so quiet that no one would ever have suspected that foreign agents lurked all about. But it was just under such a cover that the nefarious bridge and harbor mining work ordered by Del Mar's superiors was going ahead quietly.

As our car climbed a hill on the other side of which, in the valley, was a bridge, we could not see one of Del Mar's men in hiding at the top. He saw us, however, and immediately wigwagged with his handkerchief to several others down at the bridge where they were attaching a pair of wires to the planking.

"Someone coming," muttered one who was evidently a lookout.

The men stopped work immediately and hid in the brush. Our car passed over the bridge and we saw nothing wrong. But no sooner had we gone than the men crept out and resumed work which had progressed to the point where they were ready to carry the wires of an electric connection through the grass, concealing them as they went.

In the study of his bungalow, all the time, Del Mar was striding angrily up and down, while his men waited in silence.

Finally he paused and turned to one of them. "See that the coast is clear and kept clear," he ordered. "I want to go down."

The man saluted and went out through the panel. A moment later Del Mar gave orders to the other man who also saluted and left the house by the front door, just as our car pulled up.

Del Mar, the moment the man was gone, put on his hat and moved toward the panel in the wall. He was about to enter when he heard someone coming down the hall to the study and stepped back, closing the panel. It was the butler announcing us.

We had entered Del Mar's bungalow and now were conducted to his library. There Elaine told him the whole story, much to his apparent surprise, for Del Mar was a wonderful actor.

"You see," he said as she finished telling of the finding and the losing of the torpedo, "just what I had feared would happen has happened. Doubtless the foreign agents have the deadly weapon now. However, I'll not quit. Perhaps we may run them down yet."

He reassured us and we thanked him as we said good-by. Outside, Elaine and I got into the car again and a moment later spun off, making a little detour first through the country before hitting the shore road back again to Dodge Hill.

* * * * * * *

On the rocky shore of the promontory several men were engaged in sinking a peculiar heavy disk which they submerged about ten or twelve feet. It seemed to be held by a cable, and to it wires were attached, apparently so that when a key was pressed a circuit was closed.

It was an "oscillator," a new system for the employment of sound for submarine signaling, using water instead of air as a medium to transmit sound waves. It was composed of a ring magnet, a copper tube lying in an air gap in a magnetic field and a stationary central armature. The tube was attached to a steel diaphragm. Really it was a submarine bell which could be used for telegraphing or telephoning both ways through water.

The men finished executing the directions of Del Mar and left, carefully concealing the land connections and key of the bell, while we were still at Del Mar's.

We had no sooner left, however, than one of the men who had been engaged in installing the submarine bell entered the library.

"Well?" demanded Del Mar.

"The bell is installed, sir," he said. "It will be working soon."

"Good," nodded Del Mar.

He went to a drawer and from it took a peculiar-looking helmet to which was attached a sort of harness fitting over the shoulders and carrying a tank of oxygen. The headpiece was a most weird contrivance, with what looked like a huge glass eye in front. It was in reality a submarine life-saving apparatus.

Del Mar put it on, all except the helmet, which he carried with him, and then, with his assistant, went out through the panel in the wall. Through the underground passage the two groped their way, lighted by an electric torch, until at last they came to the entrance hidden in the underbrush, near the shore.

Del Mar went over to the concealed station from which the submarine bell was sounded and pressed the key as a signal. Then he adjusted the submarine helmet to his head and deliberately waded out into the water, farther and farther, up to his head, then deeper still.

As he disappeared into the water, his emissary turned and went back toward the shore road.

* * * * * * *

The ride around through the country and back to the shore road from Del Mar's was pleasant. In fact, it was always pleasant to be with Elaine, especially in a car.

We were spinning along at a fast clip when we came to a rocky part of the coast. As we made a turn a sharp breeze took off my hat and whirled it far off the road and among the rocks of the shore. Elaine shut down the engine, with a laugh at me, and we left the car by the road while we climbed down the rocks after the hat.

It had been carried into the water, close to shore and, still laughing, we clambered over the rocks. Elaine insisted on getting it herself and in fact did get it. She was just about to hand it to me, when something bobbed up in the water just in front of us. She reached for it and fished it out. It was a cylinder with air-tight caps on both ends, in one of which was a hook.

"What do you suppose it is?" she asked, looking it over as we made our way up the rocks again to the car. "Where did it come from?"

We did not see a man standing by our car, but he saw us. It was Del Mar's man who had paused on his way to watch us. As we approached he hid on the other side of the road.

By this time we had reached the car and opened the cylinder. Inside was a note which read:

"Chief arrived safely. Keep watch."

"What does it mean?" repeated Elaine, mystified.

Neither of us could guess and I doubt whether we would have understood any better, if we had seen a sinister face peering at us from behind a rock near by, although doubtless the man knew what was in the tube and what it meant.

We climbed into the car and started again. As we disappeared the man came from behind the rocks and ran quickly up to the top of the hill. There, from the bushes, he pulled out a peculiar instrument composed of a strange series of lenses and mirrors set up on a tripod.

Eagerly he placed the tripod, adjusting the lenses and mirrors in the sunlight. Then he began working them, and it was apparent that he was flashing light beams, using a Morse code. It was a heliograph.

Down the shore on the top of the next hill sat the man who had already given the signal with the handkerchief to those in the valley who were working on the mining of the bridge. As he sat there, his eye caught the flash of the heliograph signal. He sprang up and watched intently. Rapidly he jotted down the message that was being flashed in the sunlight:

Dodge Girl has message from below. Coming in car. Blow first bridge she crosses.

Down the valley the lookout made his way as fast as he could. As he approached the two men who had been mining the bridge, he whistled sharply. They answered and hurried to meet him.

"Just got a heliograph," he panted. "The Dodge girl must have picked up one of the messages that came from below. She's coming over the hill now in a car. We've got to blow up the bridge as she crosses."

The men were hurrying now toward the bridge which they had mined. Not a moment was to be lost, for already they could see us coming over the crest of the hill.

In a few seconds they reached the hidden plunger firing box which had been arranged to explode the charge under the bridge. There they crouched in the brush ready to press the plunger the moment our car touched the planking.

One of the men crept out a little nearer the road. "They're coming!" he called back, dropping down again. "Get ready!"

* * * * * * *

Del Mar's emissaries had not reckoned, however, that anyone else might be about to whom the heliograph was an open book.

But, farther up the hill, hiding among the trees, the old farmer and his dog were sitting quietly. The old man was sweeping the Sound with his glasses, as if he expected to see something any moment.

To his surprise, however, he caught a flash of the heliograph from the land. Quickly he turned and jotted down the signals. As he did so, he seemed greatly excited, for the message read:

"Dodge girl has message from below. Coming in car. Blow first bridge she crosses."

Quickly he turned his glasses down the road. There he could see our car approaching. He put up his glasses and hurried down the hill toward the bridge. Then he broke into a run, the dog scouting ahead.

We were going along the road nicely, now, coasting down the hill. As we approached the bridge Elaine slowed up a bit to cross, for the planking was loose.

Just then the farmer who had been running down the hill saw us.

"Stop!" he shouted.

But we did not hear. He ran after us, but the chase was hopeless. He stopped, in despair.

With a gesture of vexation he took a step or two mechanically off the road.

Elaine and I were coming fast to the bridge now.

In their hiding place Del Mar's men were watching breathlessly. The leader was just about to press the plunger when all of a sudden a branch in the thicket beside him crackled. There stood the farmer and his dog.

Instantly the farmer seemed to take in the situation. With a cry he threw himself at the man who had the plunger. Another man leaped at the farmer. The dog settled him. The others piled in, and a terrific struggle followed. It was all so rapid that, to all seconds seemed like hours.

We were just starting to cross the bridge.

One of the men broke away and crawled toward the plunger box.

Our car was now in the middle of the bridge.

Over and over rolled the men, the dog doing his best to help his master. The man who had broken away reached toward the plunger.

With a shout he pushed it down.

* * * * * * *

Our car had just cleared the bridge when we were startled by a terrific roar behind us. It was as though a thousand tires had blown out at once. Elaine shut off the engine automatically and we looked back.

The whole bridge had been blown up. A second before we had been in the middle of it.

As the explosion came, the men who had been struggling in the thicket, paused, startled, and stared out. At that instant the old farmer saw his chance. It was all over and he bolted, calling the dog.

Along the road to the bridge he ran, two of the men after him.

"Come back," growled the leader. "Let him go. Do you want us all to get caught?"

As the farmer ran up to the bridge he saw it in ruins. But down the road he could see Elaine and myself, sitting in the car, staring back at the peril which we had so narrowly escaped. His face lighted up in as great joy as a few moments before it had shown despair.

"What can that have been?" asked Elaine, starting to get out of the car. "What caused it?"

"I don't know," I returned, taking her arm firmly. "But enough has happened today. It was intended for us, we'd better hasten. Someone might take a shot at us. Come, we have the car. We can get out before anyone does anything more. Let's do it. Things are going on about us of which we know nothing. The safest thing is to get away."

Elaine looked at the bridge in ruins and shuddered. It was the closest we could have been to death and have escaped. Then she turned to the wheel quickly and the little car fairly jumped ahead.

"Oh, if Craig were only here," she murmured. "He would know what to do."

As we disappeared over the crest of the next hill, safe, the old farmer and his dog looked hard at us.

The silence after the explosion was ominous.

He glanced about. No one was pursuing him. That seemed ominous, too. But if they did pursue he was prepared to elude them. They must never recognize the old farmer.

As he turned, he deliberately pulled off his beard, then plunged again into the woods and was lost.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

We Opened the Cylinder. Inside Was a Note.

Her Secret

Much Depended on It, and She Was Wise In Keeping It.

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS.

A ring at the telephone.

I arose from my desk. I was at my office opening my morning mail. Taking up the instrument, I asked who called.

"Are you Mr. Constable?" asked a woman's voice.

"I am."

"I'm Sarah, Miss Van Dorn's maid. Miss Van Dorn has told me to call you up to say that we found Mr. Davidson dead in his bed this morning."

"Mr. Davidson!"

"Yes, sir."

Mr. Davidson was an elderly gentleman possessed of considerable wealth who had no children of his own. Clara Van Dorn was his sister's daughter, an orphan whom he had taken to live with him. She was a lovely girl, though I may be considered prejudiced in her favor in saying so, because she was my betrothed.

I stood for a few moments with the receiver at my ear, too surprised and shocked at the announcement to know what to think or say. The first thought that took shape in my brain was that Clara had no one except the servants to sustain her in her trouble. My next was that her uncle must have suffered violence of some sort, for he had been in excellent health. My brain whirled on, one thought after another coursing through it. What did this sudden death mean? Why did not Clara announce it herself?

"Is it known what caused Mr. Davidson's death?" I asked.

"Well, sir, it looks as if he had been murdered."

"Murdered!"

"Yes, sir."

There was another pause in the dialogue which was broken by me:

"Tell Miss Van Dorn that I will be with her soon."

On arriving at the house I was admitted by the maid and found Clara in the library waiting for me. The shades were drawn so that I did not see her in a bright light. I regretted this, because very naturally I was interested to see in her features how she bore the shock. She was calmer than I had expected to find her. She looked rather troubled than shocked or grieved. I put my arms about her and asked her to tell me what I naturally was impatient to know, but I was obliged to draw it from her by questions.

"There is evidence that he was murdered?" I began.

"Yes, he was murdered."

"By whom?"

"We don't know. I will be suspected." She clung to me, shivering.

"You?"

"Yes."

"Why so?"

"Uncle long ago made a will leaving all his property to me. Recently he has been paying attention to that Simmons girl. If he married her naturally his fortune would go to her."

"I see."

I was now as troubled as Clara, realizing that there was a motive in this for murder and that it would surely draw attention to her in a very unpleasant way.

"Don't worry," I added. "We will doubtless be able to show that you were altogether too fond of your uncle to desire his death."

"Evidence to that effect would avail nothing."

I was surprised at the tone in which she said this. It gave evidence that she had already realized the danger in which she stood.

"Have you," I asked, "no clew to the murderer?"

"I have a suspicion."

"What is it?"

"Some years ago uncle was instrumental in convicting a man who broke into the house and took away the silver. The burglar was sent to prison for ten years. That was about eight years ago. Good behavior, I suppose, would take about two years off the term for which he was sentenced."

"Did the man threaten revenge?"

"Not that I know of, but I was in court when he was sentenced and saw him look as much at uncle."

"Would you know the burglar again if you should see him?"

"Certainly. And there is a physical defect by which he could be identified."

"What is that?"

"The forefinger of his right hand is minus the first two joints."

Clara was falling into a steadiness worthy of a detective. I was surprised and proud of her. I drew her closer to me.

"Whatever is the result," she said, relapsing into her troubled condition, "you won't believe I did it, will you?"

"Certainly not, sweetheart," drawing her cheek up against mine.

I took charge of everything, making arrangements for the funeral and affording the civil authorities opportunity to investigate. One of them—a detective, I fancied—went into the room where the body lay. Noticing an empty beer bottle on a table, he asked why it was there and was told that Mr. Davidson often drank beer at night to induce sleep. When Sarah told him she had taken a bottle of beer to the room the night before Mr. Davidson's death the detective asked where was the glass from which the beer had been drunk. Sarah said that Mr. Davidson either drank his beer from a stone mug or a silver cup. On the evening before his death he had drunk from the cup. When the detective asked where was the cup Sarah said she had not seen it since she had placed it on the table the evening before.

I saw by the detective's expression that he considered the disappearance of the cup an important point. He next asked who was the first person known to enter the room after the murder, and the maid replied, "Miss Van Dorn."

I winced at this, for taken with what Clara had told me about her expected inheritance it was an additional complication for her. The detective asked the maid how many such cups there were in the house, and she told him that there was only one. He directed her to search for it, which she did, but was unable to find it.

This was all I knew about this clew, for I was called away to give some directions and heard nothing more of it.

I took charge of working up a case for Clara. I went to the penitentiary where the burglar had been confined and learned that he had been discharged ten days before the murder. I employed detectives to hunt him up, but they found no trace of him. I gave the police authorities the information about him that Clara had given me, but they said there was "nothing in it." Men are sent to state prison every day, but they don't murder persons instrumental in sending them there.

After the funeral Mr. Davidson's lawyer produced the deceased's last will and testament, leaving Clara all his property. As soon as this fact was determined the suspicion she and I feared began to loom up against her. We expected an arrest and were prepared for it. It came two weeks after the murder, and bail was forthcoming.

And now a singular thing came to pass between Clara and me. I was more worried than she. Perceiving my anxiety, she threw her arms about me and said:

"Don't you worry, Frank; it will come out all right."

"Why are you confident?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't want to tell you. In the first place, something may happen that I don't count on, and, in the second, when two persons have a secret it is no longer a secret. If certain persons interested in my conviction knew what I know they would spoil it all."

I begged her to explain, but she would not, contenting herself with the words, "Don't worry; it will come out all right."

The trial naturally attracted a good deal of attention. Many believed Clara guilty, but few believed that she would be convicted because of a lack of evidence, for there was nothing but circumstantial evidence against her and very little of that. But if she were not vindicated I felt that her life would be ruined and mine would be ruined with it.

When the case came before the court not even Clara's attorney knew her secret. He expected to secure her acquittal without any difficulty, but he had no idea that she would be considered guiltless by the world. The prosecuting attorney made the principal part of his attack that the accused was the first person to go into her uncle's room after the murder and it was she who had taken away the cup from which he had drunk. Of course the motive for the murder was that Mr. Davidson was about to marry, which would eventually give his wife a property that had been intended for his niece.

Clara came into court with a wooden box in her hand, which she carried as though there was something in it of very fragile texture. She sat holding this box in one position till the prosecutor, having given an account of the deceased's having drunk beer the night of the murder and told of the disappearance of the cup from which he had drunk it, cried out dramatically:

"Where is the cup?"

"Here," replied Clara in a contrastingly soft voice.

Drawing a sliding cover from the box, she withdrew a silver cup which presented a smooth surface. It had been placed in the box so that this surface would not be touched by the wood. Taking a magnifying glass from a little bag she carried on her arm, she handed the glass to her attorney. He saw on the cup's surface the imprint of a thumb and three fingers, the first two bones of the forefinger being missing.

Turning to the jury, he told what he had seen, and every juryman was permitted to see it for himself.

Clara, suspecting that the cup might bear a clew, had removed and hidden it. As soon as she was in a position to examine it she saw the imprint, which, being perishable, she had guarded to the best of her ability, not even revealing its existence.

Clara was not only acquitted, but vindicated. I have sometimes thought that she might have let me into her secret; but, considering the frailty of the evidence on which hung so much for her, I have concluded that her precaution was a wise one.

Her counsel, however, never forgave her for not telling him what she had concealed. I have never borne him out in this, for I think that if she had revealed it to any one I should have been that person. I should have doubtless advised her to tell it to her counsel. He would have insisted on examining the imprint. Who can say that in the examinations which would likely have followed the imprint of a maimed finger would not have disappeared?

FOUND COPPERHEAD IN PEAS

Arkansas Farmer Receives Nervous Shock When He Pulls Snake Out of Box.

Omaha, Ark.—Ed Weaver, a stockman and farmer, received a nervous shock when he pulled a live copperhead snake from a box of cowpeas which he was shelling.

The peas were in the hulls in a sack, from which Weaver dumped them into an empty box, got in and tramped them.

As he lifted an armful of the hulls a copperhead snake wriggled out of his arms and slipped back into the box, angrily darting its tongue at him.

For a moment Weaver was unnerved by his close call, then grabbed a club, threw the snake out on the floor and killed it.

Pays After 14 Years.

Grand Rapids, N. D.—Fourteen years ago Judge L. K. Hassell of Grand Forks county billed Jacob de Lorimier of Chicago for $1.25 for a certified copy of a will. He has just received de Lorimier's check for $1.25 in payment of the old account.

Queer Contradiction.

"I can't understand why my husband don't like cats."

"Nothing queer about a dislike of that sort."

"But he's so fond of a little kitty they have at the club."

Three former Bellefonte Academy football players will be on this year's varsity football eleven at the University of Pittsburgh. They are Seidel and Stahl. The Pittsburgh "Chronicle-Telegraph" several days ago published the following: Bellefonte Academy, which has furnished such a large number of athletes to the local university, comes to the front this fall with two linesmen in Seidel and Stahl, declared to be two of the finest performers the Centre County prep school has produced. This will give Bellefonte three representatives on the Varsity squad, 'Red' Carlson also being a graduate of Prof. Hughes' school. Stahl, who is a Scranton boy, weighs well over 200 pounds, and looks like a strong candidate for the guard position left vacant by the graduation of 'Red' Smith, who, by the way, was also from Bellefonte. Another ÆTNA Check Came This Morning

ISN'T it fine, John! Your eighth week in bed just gone by and we've received two of these checks for $200 each. We can buy that new dining room set now as though nothing had happened.

Every husband ought to take out an ÆTNA DISABILITY POLICY, John. We women are so dependent on what you men do for us — especially when we have children.

Just think—$50 a week as long as you're sick, up to a full year. And at such a trifling cost, too. Oh, John, why will men put off these things until it's too late! We women were never meant to fight hardships that a few cents a day could save us from.
